

Setter Communication Style Guide

Analysis date: 29 September 2026

Evidence base: 49 available one-to-one client chats and 1,540 outbound text messages written by the authorised owner account. Lola PureLife and WWB were excluded.

Scope: Text messages and captions only; calls, voice notes and media are outside the analysis.

Privacy: This guide uses de-identified short language fragments and aggregate statistics only—no names, full messages, client stories, health details or commercial terms.

Purpose: Help a setter sound consistent with the coaching brand: high-energy, direct, supportive and action-oriented. It is not a licence to impersonate the coach or make coaching, medical, pricing or contractual decisions.

1. Voice snapshot

The owner's written style is short, upbeat and momentum-led. The communication pattern is rarely formal or polished-for-polish's sake. It reads like a supportive coach or teammate who wants to acknowledge progress, remove friction and move immediately to the next useful action.

Core characteristics

- Direct: Gets to the point quickly; one clear reason for writing.
- Warm: Uses simple acknowledgement before asking for something.
- Energetic: Celebrates wins and uses momentum language without long hype speeches.
- Practical: Favors a question, a choice or a next step over abstract motivation.
- Casual: Friendly Australian gym-floor tone; low formality, conversational rhythm.
- Accountable: Follows up clearly and links messages to an action or a time.

Setter translation: Sound like a helpful, switched-on member of the coaching team—not a scripted closer, not a best friend, and not the coach pretending through another person.

2. Quantitative style profile

Pattern	Observed signal	Setter default
Average message length	17 words	Aim for 10–18 words for most messages.

Median message length	12 words	Keep a single idea in each message.
Messages containing a question	40%	Use one clear question often to keep the conversation moving.
Messages containing an exclamation mark	44%	Use an exclamation only to reinforce a genuine win or next step.
Multiline messages	6%	Default to single-line; use bullets only when clarity genuinely requires them.
Most-used encouragement emoji	👊 (170 mentions)	Use 👊 as the default momentum marker; generally no more than one emoji per message.

Other recurring emojis include 😂, 🤔, 😊 and 🙌. Use them only when the lead has already established a playful or warm tone.

3. Tone sliders

Dimension	Target	What it sounds like
Directness	8/10	Clear asks, simple choices and decisive next steps.
Warmth	7/10	Acknowledge the person before moving forward.
Formality	2/10	Conversational rather than corporate.
Energy	8/10	Positive and forward-moving, without forcing hype.
Urgency	6/10	Encourage an answer or a booking without pressure tactics.
Humour	3/10	Light only after the lead opens that door.

4. The message anatomy

Default structure

1. Acknowledge the person's message or intent.
2. Focus the conversation with one question or one choice.
3. Move to one clear next step.
4. Confirm the time, action or handoff.

Example flow

Acknowledge → clarify → next step

- Love to hear it 🙌 What are you looking to improve most right now?
- No stress. Would today or tomorrow work better for a quick chat?
- Perfect—I'll line that up and confirm it with you shortly.

These are new examples, written in the observed style; they are not copied messages.

Pacing rules

- One message = one purpose.
- One question at a time.
- Use a choice when possible: today or tomorrow, morning or afternoon.
- Do not send a wall of text to answer a simple question.
- After no reply, make the next message easier to answer—not more persuasive.

5. Short phrase bank

These are short, de-identified fragments found in the owner's message style. Use them naturally; do not stack several into one message.

Openers and rapport

- “hey mate”
- “hey there”
- “hope you're having a great week”
- “hope you had a good week”
- “so good to hear”

- “love to hear it”
- “no stress”
- “that’ s all good”

Encouragement

- “that’ s amazing mate”
- “killer start”
- “major win”
- “great work”
- “you got this”
- “showing up for yourself”
- “keep building that momentum”
- “that’ s perfect”

Direction and next steps

- “plan ahead”
- “focus on the basics”
- “lock in”
- “get back on track”
- “let me know”
- “just a reminder”
- “let me know how you go”
- “let me know if that’ s all good”

Booking and handoff language

- “are you free?”
- “jump on a call today”
- “quick feedback call”
- “let me know when a good time”
- “see you tomorrow”
- “I’ ll update that today”

- “I’ ll get back to you shortly”

Energy markers

- “LFG”
- “game changer”
- “let’ s go”

Use LFG only after a lead has made a positive commitment or reported a win. Do not use it when responding to hesitation, difficulty or a serious concern.

6. Language do’ s and don’ ts

Do	Don’ t
Lead with a short acknowledgement	Open with a long pitch or generic corporate greeting
Ask one specific question	Stack multiple qualifying questions together
Give a simple choice	Use pressure or artificial scarcity
Keep the energy optimistic	Sound overly familiar before rapport exists
Use plain, casual language	Use clinical, jargon-heavy or motivational-speaker wording
Confirm a concrete next step	End without a clear action, question or timeframe
Say “I’ ll check with the coach” when needed	Guess at coaching, pricing, policy or program details
Match the lead’ s energy	Copy slang, humour or profanity too aggressively

Avoid

- “Just circling back” or overly corporate follow-up language.
- Overusing exclamation marks, emojis, “LFG” or hype.
- Shame, guilt, body criticism or pressure-based language.
- Making a personal claim on the coach’ s behalf.
- Any statement that implies the setter is the coach.

7. Setter scenario playbooks

First reply to a new lead

Goal: Be warm, orient the conversation, and invite one useful answer.

Hey mate—I'm part of the coaching team 🦊 What's the main thing you're looking to improve right now?

Clarifying the goal

Goal: Turn a vague interest into a specific outcome.

Love to hear it. If we fast-forward a few months, what would a great result look like for you?

Finding the current sticking point

Goal: Identify the friction without interrogating the lead.

Got you. What's been the biggest thing getting in the way lately?

Inviting them to a call

Goal: Offer a clear, low-friction next step.

Sounds like a quick chat would help. Are you free later today or tomorrow?

When a lead is slow to reply

Goal: Re-open the conversation without pressure.

No stress at all—just checking in. Still keen to have a quick chat when it suits?

When they are hesitant

Goal: Lower pressure and return control to them.

Totally get it. What would you need to feel clear on before taking the next step?

When the answer needs the coach

Goal: Be helpful without overstepping.

Good question. I'll check that with the coach and come back to you shortly.

Confirming the booking

Goal: Lock in a simple commitment.

Perfect—I've got you down for tomorrow. I'll send the details through shortly 🙌

Transparent handoff

Goal: Be open if asked who is replying.

I'm part of the coaching team. I can help with the next step, and I'll loop the coach in where needed.

8. Escalation and transparency rules

The setter must hand off—not improvise—when a conversation involves:

- Specific coaching, training or nutrition advice
- Injury, pain, medical, mental-health or urgent wellbeing concerns
- Pricing, contracts, refunds or policy questions
- Complaints, dissatisfaction or a sensitive interpersonal issue
- Requests to change a plan, service or appointment outside approved rules

Handoff script

Thanks for letting me know. I'm going to bring this to the coach and come back to you with the right next step.

If a person appears in immediate danger or distress, do not try to coach through it. Encourage appropriate immediate support and notify the coach promptly through the approved internal process.

9. Pre-send quality checklist

Before sending, the setter should check:

- Is this one message with one purpose?
- Is it short enough to read instantly?
- Does it sound direct, warm and practical?
- Is there one clear question, choice or next step?
- Is the energy appropriate to the lead's tone?
- Is the emoji use purposeful and limited?

- Have I avoided coaching, medical, pricing and policy claims?
- If asked, have I been clear that I am part of the coaching team?
- Have I avoided personal, sensitive or identifying details?
- Do I know what happens next if the lead replies?

10. Limitations

- This guide reflects the owner's available outbound one-to-one client text messages, not voice notes, calls or every Telegram group/channel message.
- It captures a working coaching communication style, not a separate high-volume sales-setter script.
- The setter should use the tone and structure—not copy phrases mechanically.
- Final authority for coaching, health, pricing, programme and policy matters remains with the coach or an approved decision-maker.
